Alessia Tuselli

PROFILE

Alessia Tuselli is a sociologist and lecturer at the Department of Sociology and Social Research of the University of Trento and at the University Centre for Health Professions of the University of Verona. She is a member on the Executive and Scientific Board of the University of Trento's Centre for Interdisciplinary Gender Studies, collaborates regularly with CONI Italia, and is a member of the Executive Board of UISP-Trento.

Her research focuses on the sociology of sport and gender studies, with particular attention to the social and individual dynamics that shape participation, working conditions, and professional trajectories within sports contexts. She has led and coordinated research and training initiatives, as well as empirical investigations, examining the mechanisms underpinning violence and inequality in sport. Her work analyses the racialised, gendered, and LGBTQI+ related dimensions of marginalisation and develops evidence-based strategies for prevention and for improving educational and organisational practices in sport. Notably, she directed the two-year project SheLeads – Gender Equality and Leadership in Sport (2022–2024), funded by the CARITRO Foundation and conducted at the University of Trento.

Her scholarship adopts sociological, intersectional, and interdisciplinary approaches to investigate how participation and positionality are structured within sports environments, with particular attention to their organisational, relational, and psycho-physical implications.

In parallel, she conducts research on equity in educational and professional settings, focusing on the processes that generate asymmetries and limit opportunities for access, advancement, and full participation.
